How to deal with playing to day? Its transformations related to the classical approach

Samuel Zysman

Abstract

Taking as a base widespread theories regarding child sexuality, transference, the theory of the process of symbol formation and play in language, Dr. Zysman asks whether there is a difference between present and past approaches. The author believes that the toy box is necessary and that in interrupting the session, the patient must be considered. The session between child and analyst is private. The presence of the parents must be justified in some way.
